1. ( )'s progress reports enclosed with reference dispatches were welcome here as giving a very good picture of his activities and his problems, and an indication of his future requirements.

2. As your operation progresses, it will be necessary, no doubt, for you to develop a system of reporting which will not require such unit upon your control to submit reports direct to the Home Office. For the indefinite time being, however, it is most advisable that you transmit reports in full to the Home Office. Among other things, they are most useful for the information and indoctrination of new personnel, and to provide a list for the bill of our close staff.
